

PEDAGOGY
(specialty 13.00.08)

Khazova S.A. Acmeological tendency of a personality as a determinant of competition development

The purpose of this study was to determine the value acmeological direction for the development of the competitiveness of the individual (for example, specialists in physical culture and sports). The novelty of the results of the study lies in the fact that the orientation of the person acmeologic first introduced as a determinant of competitiveness experts defining vector activity and conditioning desire to win the competition. Key findings relate to the values of the components acmeological orientation of the person for the development of competitiveness: - social content acmeological orientation of the person most important is to establish a constructive relationship with consumers, as well as to increase independence in activities and establishment of individual preparedness to increase the level of professional responsibility; - professional component in most responsible for the effectiveness of job search, the accumulation of professional experience, improve academic performance (for young professionals - in the period of study in high school) and the establishment of constructive relations specialist with the leaders

Key words: competition of specialists in physical culture and sport, acmeological tendency of a personality, determinant of competition development.

Adigeya state university

March, 11, 2011
