Korotets I.D.* Political configuration of information society: innovation and spiritual bases

The information society is a product of the post-industrial social structure. Developed political competition provided by open public access to the different institutions creates political adequacy of the post-industrial society. A further development of State is possible on the way of freedom sufficient for the information technologies realization. On what grounds the politics of the information society can be built? First of all, the information society requires innovations development. The innovations are effective but negative in relation to the reality. Global society contradictions and innovations' negativeness can be neutralized by usage of the resources of the ecological world view. These resources include a potential of rationality, modern transpersonal psychology, and the holistic world view which includes all aspects of social structure.

Key words: information society; innovative relationships; political configuration; ecological world view
