

PHILOSOPHY

Ageeva N.A.

(Rostov state medical university. Rostov-on-Don, Russia)

Corruption in Russian health care system as a malformed kind of men's law cognition

In modern society corruption prevention is a priority task not only in health system of the Russian Federation, but also throughout the country. The legal basis of corruption resistance is the original anti-corruption legal consciousness of the people, and only then – normative and law acts (the President of the Russian Federation, the Government of the Russian Federation, federal, regional and municipal government bodies etc.) Legal law in its basic idea is a formula of mature justice, formed by the adoption of individual social norms as their personal law (the law of the individual = the law of society). Individuals with the malformed kind of justice have tendency for corruptive behavior and, conversely, people with a mature sense of justice have behavior of the anti-corruption character. Corruption prevention in the country should begin with the revival of family and spirituality of the people, and in the medical community – with relations "teacher and student".

Key words: corruption, conscience, independent self-restraint, corruption and anti-corruption behavior, principle of social justice, bribery, extortion, gratitude.

January, 19, 2014