

PSYCHOLOGY

E.A. Gapchenko

(Region center of psycho-pedagogical rehabilitation and correction. Rostov-on-Don, Russia)

The nature of family relations as a component of psychological resource replacement family

The article discusses the impact of the quality of the family system in the nature of family relations and resource potential of the family as a whole, and the substitute family in particular. It also examines the characteristics of family relationships, which can complicate the process of adaptation of the foster children in psychological space of the substitute family. Also it presents a practical experience in the field of maintenance of substitute families in the evaluation phase of psychological readiness to send a child to a family for rearing. A qualitative analysis of the parameters reflecting features of family relations. On the basis of the analysis it is carried out type families of potential surrogate parenting resource, ambivalent and also explored correlations between various parameters of family relations

Key words: family, family functions, family resources, family relationships, the replacement family, the adopted child

May, 29, 2015