Social and psychological features of interrelation of sociocultural space and process of professionalizing of the personality

Social and psychological features of process of professionalizing of the personality and conditionality are considered by its parameters of sociocultural space. It is proved that process of professionalizing depends both on an orientation of the personality, and on sociocultural space which determines this process. The sociocultural space is considered in a complex from positions of the personality, the organization and society. Characteristics which make structural and substantial structure of career space are allocated. The typology of professional career is considered: traditional, cumulative, multivariable, linear office career. Parameters which define sociocultural space of career are described. In general, sociocultural and psychological characteristics of space in which the person seizes a profession, it is realized as the professional, are presented, on the one hand, by its social volume and structure, and on the other hand, the potential by means of which the personality develops as the subject of work.
