

LINGUISTICS

A.P. Prokhorova

(Rostov state university of civil engineering, Rostov-on-Don, Russia)

Phraseological units in the context of cultural linguistics and linguapragmatics (with reference to the phraseological units with the meaning of speaking)

It is considered the linguapragmatic component of phraseological units in general and phraseological units with the meaning of speaking in particular. Possession of cultural connotation and pragmatic sense of phraseological units is not less important than the denotative value of phraseological units. The study of Russian and French phraseological units with the meaning of speaking revealed the peculiarities of communication and behaviour patterns that are typical of the representatives of the Russian and French cultural linguistics. The paper analyzes phraseological units with the meaning of speaking, which come to the forefront in the public conscience putting other idioms with similar meaning to the fringe of consciousness. It describes the reasons that influenced the change in the status of these units in the language. It is claimed that there is a special phraseological worldview, common to all languages figural system of phraseological units, which depicts the original features of the national worldview.

Key words: phraseological unit, cultural linguistics, linguapragmatics, idioethnic, linguistic worldview, cultural connotation, anthropocentric paradigm.

November, 3, 2015
