Foreign language communication as the self-determining factor for the professional formation of young man's personality

It is described the process of formation of the personality of a young man, his self-determining factors through the prism of foreign language communication. The characteristic of professional self-determination of youth is given as a fundamental factor of interaction with the outside world. The youth acquires its own peculiarities of social self-determination, realizes its existence in the search and definition of life meaning and status. Social self-determination is seen as the main characteristic of young people. Foreign language communication enhances the vital status and space of self-determination of the future specialist in the labor market. It is analyzed the knowledge of the cultural values of other nations through language communication. The authors conclude that the learner at the same time knows his/her own value systems, which leads to the self-determination of the individual professionally through all aspects of language communication.

Key words: self-determination, professional self-determination, foreign language communication, youth, speech norms.
