

PHILOSOPHY

Alexander D. Pokhilko, Nina M. Shabashova

(Armavir state pedagogical university. Armavir, Russian Federation)

Changes to public consciousness under the influence of modern pandemic

In the socio-philosophical aspect, the authors comprehend the latest issues facing humanity. The urgency of the problem of the social consequences of the modern pandemic (2020) lies not only in the need to solve economic and technological problems to overcome the new global crisis. Also relevant is the problem of the socio-psychological consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic in the modern world, which is expressed in a number of difficult questions. What changes are taking place in the public mind during a pandemic? How does a pandemic affect tolerance, for example, European classical tolerance? How does the Internet environment impact traditional core values and tolerance in local cultures? Informatization of society in isolation on a global scale has a very controversial effect both on the world community and on an individual person. The positive and destructive consequences of modern sociocultural processes are analyzed. It is suggested that today the problem of self-identity of a person in society is associated with an exacerbation of the question of the need to choose a path for the further development of man and society.

Key words: pandemic, public consciousness, tolerance, psychology, religion.

April 14, 2020
