

PHILOLOGY

Rais N. Safin, Larisa V. Vladimirova

(Kazan (Volga) federal university. Kazan, Russian Federation)

Lexical features of oral communication inside one religious community

It is considered lexical features of oral communication of members of the banned religious pan-Islamist party Hizb ut-Tahrir Al-Islami. The source of the language material is dialogs – oral communication between ordinary party members and party candidates at educational party seminars. A study of the speech of members of a closed community makes it possible to single out the peculiarities of usage inherent only to this community. These features include: the presence of a special dictionary serving the needs of the community, as well as the special circumstances of using the words of the Russian literary dictionary, which are used to serve the needs of the functioning of the party.

Key words: vocabulary, language of a closed community, oral communication, conceptual apparatus, features of word usage.

February 7, 2020
