The impact of globalization on the quality of the educational process in universities

Education in general is always of great interest to scientists, and during the period of globalization, interest is much higher. The quality policy in education defines the aspects that are taught to students in an integrated manner and “can be affected in training: self-awareness, sense management, motivation, empathy and social skills”. This work may be of interest to philosophers, researchers involved in the study and comparative analysis of international education, teachers of international universities, graduate students and students in most pedagogical universities and colleges. Learning is turning into a series of personal, social and developing benefits.

Key words: globalization, education, universities, modern trends.
