

PHILOLOGY

Marzhan U. Suleybanova, Tamara B. Khabusieva

(Chechen state university; Grozny state oil and technical university of academician M.D. Millionshikov. Grozny, Russian Federation)

Word-formation and semantic correlation of words

The structural component of the word form in the process of its development has the property to mutate. The result of these modification phenomena may be a modification of the original form of the dictionary unit. Such transformations as a result of the evolution of morphemic composition are noted very rarely and not in all concepts of the Russian language. Many of them are currently generally divided into exactly the same morphological parts into which they were divided several centuries ago.

Key words: word structure, morphological composition, division, language development process.

June 28, 2020
