

PEDAGOGY

Larisa V. Zanina

(Southern federal university. Rostov-on-Don, Russian Federation)

Language and morality in the age of digitalization: psychological and pedagogical approach

It is analyzed the features of the formation of moral values of the individual in the conditions of transformation of modern culture, depending on the degree of formation of language activity and concludes that it is language activity that determines the level of language culture of society as a whole. It is described the conditions that affect the formation of social features, that affect spiritual values in the context of a pandemic: the change of moral norms and values, which requires additional mental costs from young people; the phenomenon of a network virtual person; the problem of trust in information in virtual space, security and security; Internet addiction; a new "Internet ethics"; a new type of loneliness of teenagers in the network, etc. The article presents the results of studying the features of the causes of anxiety in Russian school adolescents during the period of self-isolation. The article describes specific ways to overcome the risks of self-isolation of adolescents during the pandemic on the basis of the therapeutic function of language that is being updated in the conditions of online education.

Key words: language culture, morality, risks of self-isolation, cybersocialization, communication.

November 29, 2020
