

PEDAGOGY

Maxim G. Kuleshin, Andrey B. Chernov

(Stavropol State Pedagogical Institute. Stavropol, Russian Federation; North Caucasus Federal University. Stavropol, Russian Federation)

Pedagogical ethics in the context of social relations as a problem of moral education

The peculiarity of pedagogical ethics is determined not only by the specificity of morality as a special regulator of public relations, but also by the peculiarities of the pedagogical process. The pedagogical process is universal due to its objective social necessity. It is aimed at every member of society, therefore, in one way or another, the whole society takes part in it, as well as morality, concerns all types of human activities without exception, even where they are not engaged in education and training itself. Therefore, the norms of pedagogical ethics, according to the authors, which are developed and concentrated in the framework of professional pedagogical activity, also have value for everyone in society.

Key words: professional ethics, pedagogical process, training, education, socialization, morals, morality

October 21, 2020
