

PHILOLOGY

Anna S. Statsenko, Natalya Yu. Zimina

(Kuban State Technological University. Krasnodar, Russian Federation)

Complex syntactical integral in religious style texts

Religious style for a long time in native philological science remained out of researches, that is reasoned by a variety of courses: from political to psychological. Changes of these reasons led to relieving of taboo from this topic, consequently to growth of linguists' interest to this theme. As it well-known all functional styles have its specific characteristics, a row of its specifications let separate one functional style from another one. Study of complex syntactical integer, its types that are used in religious style let determine its particularities in this language level, a wide study of regularities in its language realization is carried out, different research data in this field are summarized.

Key words: style, religious functional style, syntax, complex syntactical integer, superphrasal, period.

January 25, 2021
