

PHILOSOPHY

Mzia D. Kuparashvili, Anastasia B. Nikolaeva

(Omsk State University, Omsk, Russian Federation)

Hermeneutics in the conditions of post- and metamodernist university

It is considered the peculiarities of the dynamics of hermeneutic science – an independent cognitive field that was formed back in the Middle Ages. Nowadays, under the influence of the change of philosophical and cultural eras, hermeneutics is undergoing very noticeable transformations, expanding the subject area and making its own methodological base more stable. In the educational program of modern universities, it is often possible to record the presence of a hermeneutic course, in the conditions of which students get a fairly clear idea of the specifics and functionality of this science. On these grounds, attention should be paid to the peculiarities of teaching hermeneutics at the present time, which represents a transition from postmodernity to metamodernism: from eclecticism in art and in scientific methods to independence, but from the reasoning of conclusions; from the crisis of individuality to the possibility of multidirectional personal growth and self-actualization.

Key words: hermeneutics, post- and metamodern, modern university education.

July 24, 2021
