

PEDAGOGY

Sayan Kh. Umarova, Aksana B. Gatsaeva, Tagir U. Abuev

(Chechen State University; Chechen State Pedagogical University; Medical Institute of the Chechen State Pedagogical University. Grozny, Russian Federation)

Project activity as a motivating factor in the formation of a foreign language communicative competence of a linguist student

The article examines the impact of project activities on increasing the mobility of students in mastering intellectual, research and communication skills, providing opportunities for continuing education at a university or unhindered adaptation in the field of professional activity. There are different types of projects: research, informational, creative, linguistic. Each project has its own characteristics and contributes positive experience to the personal and professional development of a bachelor linguist.

Key words: foreign language communicative competence, project, project activity, project method.

July 25, 2021
