

PEDAGOGY

Yulia V. Shvedenko, Igor P. Makeenko, Ekaterina Yu. Litvinova

(Stavropol state pedagogical institute, Stavropol, Russian Federation Technological institute of service (branch) of the Don state technical university in Stavropol, Stavropol, Russian Federation; North Caucasus federal university, Stavropol, Russian Federation)

Moral relations in the teaching process

It is stated that the pedagogical process is the process of interaction of the teacher with students, during which certain relations of management and subordination, trust and demanding, discipline and self-discipline, mutual support and contradictions, mutual understanding and conflict arise between them. According to the authors, the nature of these relations plays a large role in the formation of the personality of students, because the development of the individual is due to the development of all other individuals with whom he or she is in direct or indirect communication. Moral relations between the teacher and the students have great social value, since it depends on their level how kindly a person who enters the period of social maturity will react to the experience of the elder in education, that is personified in the guise of a teacher.

Key words: pedagogical culture, personality, consciousness, morality, pedagogical ethics, education, motive, persuasion.

January 25, 2022
