It is analyzed English military terminology from the point of view of systematization and organization of terms. The article deals with the problems arising in the process of systematization of English military terminology. The analysis and conclusions are based on the theory of terminological systems. However, the theoretical principles are considered from a practical point of view, since the systematization of military terminology is important to simplify mutual understanding and communication in this specialized area of human activity. The importance of terminology as a separate lexical subsystem is constantly increasing, as it studies terms and their use in specific contexts and is engaged in the collection, description, processing and presentation of terms. In addition, terminology as a specialized vocabulary concerns each user of the language and is part of his cognitive development. Fluency in English military terminology can be vital in multinational military operations, as it is interrelated with the effectiveness of communication.
